THE Japan Mail is surprised that a newspaper which, " like the Hongkong Daily Press. manifeste a general desire to be just and accurate," should consider its lack of its formation "no obstacle to the delivery of ex cathedra opinions on Japanese affairs." This, we presume, is intended to be crushing. The charge of ignorance, however, is one which may be bandied backwards and forwards ad infinitum without at all elucidating the subject under discussion, while the term ez cathedra is quite meaningless when applied to the opinions of a newspaper, since those opinions can have no more force than the reasons or arguments by which they are supported. Writing on the subject of the suggested abandonment of exterritoriality The LIST OF RESID! ENTS now contains in Japan we recently said that "when the Japanese enjoy under their own laws the full security for life, property, and reputation which is conferred by the laws of Western nations, then foreigners may cease to claim exterritoriality." This, the Japan Mail admits, is an unimpeachable position, buts asks, " who is to be the judge of Japan's conour contemporary Japan herself is to be the observed by Chinese, Mal comedans, Parsees, judge; she says she is willing to adopt a code founded on those of Western nations, provided the Treaty Powers will consent to the abolition of exterritoriality; and if any one ventures to doubt the expediency of falling in with this arrangement, or to suggest that it would be well to wait until the code is in sign of frest. actual and complete operation as regards the Japanese themselves, he is, according to the Japan Mail, the creature of ignorance and prejudice; professions are, in short, to be constantly required by resid ints and those taken as the equivalent of accomplished Hung-chang has sent a despatch to the Fu-t'ai facts. The Japan Gazette, in an ably written and temperate article upon this same subject, says:- "When Japan says,-Our laws are sufficient for all the demands of our own people; England replies,-Where are those laws, and above all, where is the machinery to administer them? Our relations with you are essentially tradal, and a code of civil law with trained judges to administer it is an absolute necessity if we would avoid constant bickerings and more serious wisunderstandings. You have promulgated a code of criminal law, but it has not yet had a fair trial among your own people. To return, however, to the Japan Mail and its reply to our previous articles. Referring to the Nagasaki case we said :---"Instead of the policeman, accused of causing the death of the Chinaman who was killed, being placed on his trial in ordinary course, and being held convicted or acquitted according to the result of such trial, the case was made the subject of a private investiga- and they got the flames under before they obtained tion." from which we argued that in Japan any serious hold, and before any fire siarm was "the judicial process is not independent of active interference by the executive, and that The Saigonais says :- One of our correspondconsequently the operation of the law is not certain and impartial." This reasoning, the account of its gravity, we give under all reserve: Japan Mail says, is perfectly fair and logical _A large army is now concentrated at Bacninh. so far as it goes, but it stops short at a very 50,000 mon, namely, 25,000 Chinese regulars, important point; it fails to show that there 15,000 bandits ranged under the banner of the ...Messrs. vernment," as stated by our contemporary, " it is one which would never be dreamt of any civilized country of which public trial is one of the institutions." Here, replies the Japan Mail, is the code, which in all its leading features reflects the most enlightened spirit of Western jurisprudence, which has been critically examined by several jurisconsults of European reputation, and the tervals in the columns of the Japan Mai were, without exception, highly favourable, "It did not occur to one of these specialists, who had made the science of law their life. long study, to find fault with the discretionary power vested in the public administration by the Article we have quoted. Granting this, for the sake of argument, to be theoreti-All letters for publication should be written o one cally correct, the facts of the case only show how unfit are the Japanese courts to ad minister such a code, having regard to its be English courts have theoretically the power, in the interests of decency, to take certain cases in private, yet even such extreme cases as charges of the commission of unnatural offences are taken in public, because it is recognised that the svils of privacy are greater Editor, not for publication, but as evidence of good | than those of publicity. But in the Nagasaki case no plausible reason has ever been suggested why the bearing should not have been in public. The Japan Mail says it was made the subject of diplomatic representations by the Chinese Government, but surely this cannot be taken as placing it within the pale of the extraordinary contingencies contemplated in the articles from the code above quoted. What would have been said if the trial of O'Donnell had been conducted in private because the United States of America made diplomatic representations in the case and the whole affair had excited angry feelings? A Japanese policeman was said to have killed a Chinaman. It was set up in his defence that the Chinaman was engaged in opium smoking, which is an offence against the laws of Japan, and the killing occurred in a fracas which cosued upon the Chinaman and his companions resisting lawful arrest. Surely there is nothing in these circumstances requiring secrecy in their investigation. Three Chinamen were recently killed in Hongkong by falling from a verandah while the police were attempting to arrest them for gambling, which is an offence against the laws of the colony. A charge was laid and a sergeant of police stands committed for trial on an accusation of manslaughter. What would be said if the case were heard in private? We leave

In the first place, such an excessive rate of interest as 8 per cent, is without precedent in Europe, and its effect can only be to say the sources of China's strongth for the enrichment of foreign countries. Again, the frequency with which China has fraudulently repudiated the loans contracted from her own people makes them dread the very thought of lending to the Government, and her only resource when an emergency arises, is to apply to the foreign merchants. Now, it is not likely that the foreigner is going to bring his money all the way across the sea to supply the wants of China. No, a loan is issued and the money is collected from the Chinese people, but both the people and the Government suffer severely from such a vast amount of their own capital passing through foreign hands, as a large share of the interest is appropriated by the foreign agent: A fine scheme this indeed! China has ample means and abundant resources, and though these petty leans are not likely to cause her much embarrassment, still, for the material advancement of a country, there are other things more urbeen approved by the Minister of Public Worship gently needed than gunboats and armaments of war. An eccentric laird once had business to transnot with the Duke of H., who politely asked him to lunch. A liveried servant waited upon them, and was most assiduous in his attentions to the duke and his guest. At last the laird lost patience, and, looking at the servant, addressed him thus—"What for are ye dance, dancing about the room that gait? Can ye no draw in your chair and sit doon? I'm sure there's plenty on the table for three!" A novelty in the way of dances was given by Chinese Imperial Loan of 1878-Nominal. Mrs. Noble recently at Henley. Invitations were issued to a bud ball, at which young ladies from 12 to 18 were expected to wear white tulle dresses covered with resebuds. According to Martineau and Smith's Hardware Trade Journal, an intelligent lad of seventeen, with a decided mechanical turn of mind, has been teaching his elders. This youth, a son of Mr. E. Storey, ironmonger, of Oundle, has for twelve months past lit up his father's shop and premises, economically and well, with the electric light; and gas, we understand, has not been in use there since. To the credit of young Storey it must be added that he also made the engine which drives the electric lighting machine. There should be good news for sufferers from neuralgia, if the experiment of an American physician can be repeated with success in this country, for he has found that the application of a vibrating tuning-fork, passed along the course of the nerve, relieves the prtient completely in about half an hour. Sufferers will have to learn how to trace the nerves, and electricians will supply them with the means of keeping the fork in vibration; for in the absence of any special mention as to the pitch of the fork, it appears that the relief is obtained simply by the effect of the vibration. Hans Growyost, a worthy farmer, who has been a lifelong resident of Berks, has a shrewd wife, who has long rendered his life anything but a couch of roses. One day, not long ago, she, in a fit of pique, picked up her goods and left him, vowing never to come back. The news went around among the neighbours, and at night several of them, of whom I was one, went to condone with Hans. He sat on his front post puffing away at his pipe.—" Hans." I remarked, " I pity you."—"My boy." replied the honest Dutchman, as he disturbedly knocked out the ashes of his pipe." you was right. She has shust come back."

The most interesting point about a ponecentenarian like Sir Moses Montestore is the link he supplies with the past. For instance, the last letters of Sarab, Duchess of Marlborough, published at the instance of Lord Beauchamp, their possessor, a few years ago, are addressed to a Mr. Jennings, presumably her kinsman, whose only child, a son, who died in 1798, aged 98, was the millionaire, to whose money such propostorous claims have been made. This son was godson and page to Queen Anne. Yet Sir Moses might as a boy of twelve have talked to a man who had chatted with Marlborough and his wife, and who could give him an account from personal recollection of the grand-daughter of Charles I.

The imitation precious stones for which Paris is famous are likely to come into more extended use by the aid of a recent device of M. Gaston Trouve, the celebrated electrician. The Duke of Calvino, when captured by brigands in the neighbourhood of Trapani, was, as his relatives confess, "obese, advanced in years, and afflicted with a nervous malady." The beneficent brigands, however, by compelling him to Henila ... ride all night, and to live for thirty days on a Hongkon "Completely cured him." If any other duke. Foother. completely cured him." If any other duke, marquis, or earl—lower than that, perhaps, the Neguaki... also to be " obese, advanced in years, and afflicted with a nervous malady, "he might do worse than to ride round his park for a night, and retire to the coal-cellar for a month. To be oured of old age is worth some sacrifice .- Globe.

The New York telegrams a week or two ago gave a summary of Henry Ward Becchor's deliverance on theatres after he had seen Mr. Irving. It appears from the New York papers that the statement was made at the Plymouth Church Barometer week-night meetings, at which Mr. Beecher often Temperature replies to questions put to him by any person in Hamidity the audience. A white-haired old gentleman at Direction of wind one of these meetings wanted to know why Mr. Beecher, who had sometimes spoken against the drama, had recently gone to see "Pinafore" and other plays-whether his objections had been removed, and if so from what cause? The Brooklyn pastor, seated comfortably in his chair, explained that he had been brought up to regard the theatre as a bad institution, and to consider that going to such a place "was almost as had as going to the devil." For many years his time was too fully occupied to pay much attention to the subject, but at last he went to see Salvini in "Othello," and was glad that he went. The question as to what he would advise was advoitly denced. "I advise every young man to follow in my footsteps," said the wary old divine, " and, when you are seventy yours old, go and see the best setors you can find."

EXTRACTS.

THE VIOLIN. Oh, fair to see! Fashioned in witchery! With purfied ourves outlining Thine airy form, soit shining. In mould like ripening maiden, Budding and beauty-laden; Thou'rt naught but wood and string, Crowned with a carved abroll. Yet when we hear thee sing We deem thou hast a soul. In some old tree Was born thy inclody-Its boughs with breezes playing, Its trunk to tempests swaying, Carol of wild birds singing.

The woodman's axe loud ringing; Light arch of forest limb Curving thine every line, Tones of the forest hymn Grown ripe in thee like wine. Lightly the bow, As if with life aglow.

Thy mystic grabe revealing, Shall set the witches dancing ; With classic notes entrancing, Touch deepest chords of feeling. Thy secret caves resound As where enchanting elves, Flinging the cohoes round. Blithely disport themselves.

How wild thy gleo! How sweet thy harmony ! Murmur of light heart dreaming, Voice of the valkyr screaming, Song of the cascade's dashings, Danco of auroral flashings! O woird and wondrous thing ! Whate'er thy mood of art To wail or laugh or sing, Thou'rt monerch of the heart.

Some of the reasons which Hawkins gives H. for his admiration of England and things W English are interesting, as showing traits of |S the national character which have helped not to a little to make a nation great. He is no Republican of that type, too common across the Channel, which seeks to forget the past | and takes no pride in a victory that may have been won by a King. He loves the Edwards and Henrys who led his forefathers to victory; he adores Elizabeth; and has to think it can maintain not only "a comlant gentry of fair revenues." Nor does he Messrs. Dincks & Co. forget the yeomanry, "a more ingenious sort of husbandmen, a rank of men hardly known abroad." His testimony on the condition-of-England question of his day, yeoman, live plentifully in England. "The ploughboy and swineherd are warm-clad and well-fed. The day labourer lives merrily, and out of his gains maintains his family in an indifferent plentiful manner. The artificer hath all necessaries about him, and enjoys himself with comfort." As to enjoyment it may be that the Puritan rule was not so austere as the Royalists represented it. "It is questionable," thinks Hawkins, " whether any other country affords more pleasure. Infinite is the variety of sports and games that the elements yield us." England has more parks than all Europe besides. "No country can equal it in sound of belis." In fact, everything in the island is of the best quality, not excepting the climate, for which Such is the title given by one Richard Haw- wo, degenerate offspring of our sires, are kins to a little octave volume written by him fain to apologize.
